Adele Faber and Elaine Mazlish, working with elementary-school teachers Lisa Nyberg and Rosalyn Antine Templeton, expand on the message of ""How to Talk So Kids Will Listen."" They advise to acknowledge children's feelings and be respectful of their emotions, enabling them to learn better and think more clearly. It offers a dialogue technique for communicating with kids. Through sample dialogues that clarify what to say and how to say it, the authors spell out proven ways to handle problems that interfere with learning in school and at home. Faber and company cover all the skills needed for effective learning--from encouraging children to cooperate to avoiding the pitfalls of punishment to offering praise and criticism that inspire a child to do his or her best.
