Vivid, whimsical, and dark—this collection of twenty-two prose poems celebrates transformation and imparts peculiar advice on how to live life in a strange, strange world. Through themes of the forest and outer space, dying and rebirth, childhood and coming of age, this small book booms with lusciously unsettling starkness and fairy tale flair. Each perfect nubbin of verse is suitable for young and old alike, for reading quietly to oneself or reciting aloud in a group.

EXCERPT from chapter, "THE BEAR, HER HUSBAND":

We switch places at the edge of town. The guy gives me his hat and his boots, and I tell him how to find his way back into the woods, to the stream and the rock that I like to sleep on, and where all the best she-bears have been lately. And is he good at catching deer? He hasn't caught deer before, he says. But yeah, sure—how hard could it be? I tell him the trick is to surprise them. Out of the bushes, boom—one big smack.

I get into his slick car and roll it into town, to his condo behind its tall gates, his home where his kids are mine, and his wife Charlotte is my wife now. She is honeysweet on the lips and if what I am is obvious to her once I take my hat and boots off, she doesn't say it.
