Although we don't use the phrase The devil made me do it, Satan has introduced other sayings that trick us into blaming others and avoid taking ownership for our actions. For example, That makes me mad! or That's just the way I am! are common sayings that are inconsistent with gospel principles. In this engaging fireside presentation, the author invites teenagers to stop making excuses and to start taking responsibility.

Invitations include: What part of my nature do I need to seek out the Atonement of Jesus Christ to help me change? What emotions can I choose to better control? Who in my family do I need to choose to love more through service and sacrifice? What fears and doubts can I move past and act in faith so that I can accomplish the difficult things the Lord has asked me to do in my life?
