Second Hope Cowboy (Second Chance Cowboy Book 7) Rhonda Lee Carver

Tucker Bailey wants peace and quiet, but when his ex-wife shows up disturbing his personal breathing space, all hell breaks loose. When she has an accident on his property, his protective side, and frustration, kicks in.

Hope could think of far worse conditions than being nursed by a cowboy—just too bad it happens to be her ex. Forced to stay together in a cabin in the middle of nowhere, demons of the past awaken, as well as parts of the body. A tumble down a hill, a mud fight and a hot shower land them in the best place possible, at least temporarily.

Waking up in bed with his ex wasn't the brightest move for Tucker, but it sure did feel good at the time. How will he let her go again? He comes up with a plan. If she wants the house they shared, she'll have to live in it for a month, with him. Thirty days could be the death of him, but Tucker plans to walk away with something he was robbed of two years ago—closure.

Hope wants the house, but she'll pay the price when she faces her tragic past. The secret she kept from Tucker could be the very thing that destroys a second chance at love.
